Soaring Popularity of Biking 45 Years in the Making

Can you feel the impact that 45 years of bicycle advocacy is having on our city? Our streets are more welcoming than ever, and the stories of people biking in San Francisco speak for themselves. There are stories like that of Nori Tong (on page 8), who bikes her children between the Castro and the Sunset every day. We can also take heart in the experience of Wei-min Wang (featured on page 12), who has biked over 2,000 miles since taking our Adult Learn to Ride class last year.

Nori and Wei-min are inspiring, and they are far from alone. Like so many of our members, more and more San Franciscans are choosing the freedom, fun and ease of biking.

The popularity of biking is rising faster than that of any other transportation mode in SF. Last year alone, San Franciscans took 9 percent more trips by bike than in the previous year. Looking back over the last decade, bike rides are up 184 percent in our city.

That’s right: We have nearly tripled the number of bike trips in San Francisco in the last 10 years.

This fact is an incredible testament to the focus and passion that SF Bicycle Coalition members bring to our work. In addition to speaking up for people who bike at City hearings and community meetings, our members gave over 9,000 hours of their time volunteering at events, as Service Stations and in the office last year.

Like a bicycle, our movement is people-powered. The San Francisco Bicycle Coalition is different things to different people: a source of great canvas bags on Bike to Work Day, a resource on how to tackle the scourge of double-parking in unprotected bike lanes. We need to make sure that there are safe routes to and through every park where a San Francisco child plays. (Check out the recent improvements for bikes and parks on page 5.) And we need to keep our eyes on the prize of a bike path crossing the entirety of the Bay Bridge. (See the latest on page 5.)

Together, we are making a difference. San Francisco’s streets increasingly reflect our hopes and dreams. But you and I know that there is so much more work to be done.

We need to keep the pressure on City leaders to deliver more protected bike lanes connecting neighborhoods across San Francisco. We need City agencies to tackle the scourge of double-parking in unprotected bike lanes. We need to make sure that there are safe routes to and through every park where a San Francisco child plays. (Check out the recent improvements for bikes and parks on page 5.)

And we need to keep our eyes on the prize of a bike path crossing the entirety of the Bay Bridge. (See the latest on page 5.)

Our streets hold an immense history, from freeways transformed into beautiful boulevards, to projects that were delayed, compromised or never realized. These streets are not perfect, but, together, we are making them better. Just look at how many more people find them bikeable today than they did 10 years ago.

Thank you for making that possible and for investing in the many victories ahead for people who bike.

See you in the bike lanes,

Brianne O’Leary Gagnon
President, Board of Directors
San Francisco Bicycle Coalition
Valencia. Folsom. Market. We see people stopping their cars in the bike lanes all across San Francisco, requiring people biking to swerve in and out of faster-moving traffic.

It does not have to be this way. Join us in taking these three steps to fight the flood of people illegally stopping in bike lanes.

1. Request enforcement: Call 311 or tweet a picture @SF311 to officially request enforcement of laws forbidding people from parking in bike lanes.

2. Voice concern with SFPD & Supervisors: Emailing concerns to the nearest SFPD station (and copying the Supervisor representing that area) ensures a record of the problem so the police are aware of this issue. You can also tweet photos at SFPD station Twitter accounts, or voice your concern in-person at monthly meetings held by each station. Find an SFPD station map and meeting schedules at sfbike.org/sfpdstations.

3. Contact the company responsible: We offer professional driver training, but not every company has taken advantage of the opportunity. If you see a professional driver parking in bike lanes, we do not encourage confronting the driver directly. Instead, contact the company with pictures and vehicle ID information, if possible. Ask company representatives to direct drivers not to illegally and dangerously park in bike lanes, and let them know that they can contact the SF Bicycle Coalition for resources. sfbike.org/driver
Quick Releases

Welcomes & Farewells

We want to give a huge thanks and a fond farewell to our Event Planner Bonnie Walton, Community Organizer Chema Hernández Gil and Technology Coordinator Erin Durkee who are moving on to pursue new opportunities. Bonnie led us through four Bike to Work Days, with bigger, brighter celebrations every time, along with many other events, large and small. Chema helped us deliver big victories for people who bike, including our campaigns to transform Polk Street, Potrero Avenue and many others. Erin has been central to improving our email communications and helped found Women Bike SF to ensure that we are specifically reaching out to women, trans* and femme people who bike or are bike-curious.

We are also happy to announce four new additions to the team. Susan Gallentine joins us as Event Planner, with a deep background in organizing fun, engaging events, most recently at the Presidio Trust. Kelsey Roeder previously worked at the SF Department of the Environment and brings her enthusiasm for bikes and the people who love them to our newly created role of Membership Assistant. And we welcome two enthusiastic urban planners in-training, AJ León and Danny Kolosta, who will serve as Campaign Assistants during their college break this summer in their native Bay Area.

Welcome aboard, Susan, Kelsey, AJ and Danny!

New Bike Counters

Ride up and be counted! There’s something exhilarating in seeing the number tick up as you pedal past the bike counter heading east on Market Street. With two new bike counters installed by the SF Municipal Transportation Agency, the message is clear: People who bike count. One is on Valencia between 16th and 17th Streets. The other is opposite the first bike counter, westbound on Market between 9th and 10th Streets. These bike counters not only show off how much San Francisco bikes, but are testaments to SF’s dedication to smarter choices for better, more liveable streets.

Community Bike Builds: Let’s Connect!

In collaboration with our partners, we’ve already given out over 100 bikes so far this year. We’d like to thank our 2016 Community Bike Builds partners: Central City SRO Collaborative; La Voz Latina; Vietnamese Youth Development Center; Causa Justa :: Just Cause; George Washington Carver Elementary School and Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Church, as well as all the incredible volunteers who help make this work possible. If you are a part of a community group that would like to host a Community Bike Build, email francisco@sfbike.org.
Tour de Fat: Saturday, Sept. 17!

New Belgium’s Tour de Fat is back! Mark your calendar: Saturday, Sept. 17 is San Francisco’s biggest festival of bikes, costumes, music and beer for a cause. Hosted by New Belgium Brewing, this celebration of bikes and advocacy will be better than ever. If you’ve been attending previously, note that some changes are brewing!

This year, the festival is moving to a $10 ticket for entry to support bigger and better acts including Dr. Dog and an eclectic mix of performers and vaudeville acts. Find out more and get your tickets today at sfbike.org/fat.

Want free entry and a free beer? We need your help to pour brews, sell merch, park bikes and more! Sign-ups for one of the most fun volunteer opportunities of the year will open in August. Please note: You must be a current member of the SF Bicycle Coalition to volunteer at Tour de Fat.

Local Businesses ♥ Bikes

San Francisco Businesses are seeing the benefits of bicycling. Retailers are attracting more customers on bike, downtown companies bring in more young, talented workers, and employers are seeing drops in their health care costs from more employees biking to work. Is your workplace looking for ways to promote bicycling to work? We can help! Visit sfbike.org/businessmembership and get your membership rolling.

Thank you to our new and renewing Business Members: BikeLeap; Burr Pilger Mayer; Chameleon John Coupons; Dolmen Property Group; Google SF; Grace Cathedral; HNTB Corporation; Hospital Council; Hotwire; Leddy Maytum Stacy Architects; LinkedIn; Martin Building Company; O’Connor, Runkel & O’Malley LLP; Panoramic Interests; Reliance Foundry; San Francisco State University; SportWorks; Spurcycle; Sustainable Technologies; Timbuk2; Tishman Speyer; and Trumark Urban.

Bike & Play Every Weekend in Shared Schoolyards

In collaboration with our partners, The Shared Schoolyard Project now opens school playgrounds on weekends, providing places within walking distance for children and families to play and gather. Through this unique partnership between the City of San Francisco, the San Francisco Unified School District, and San Francisco’s neighborhoods and communities, schoolyards are open to the public Saturdays and Sundays from 9:00 am to 4:00 pm across the city, with at least one in each of San Francisco’s 11 Supervisorial Districts. Shared Schoolyard will hold kickoff celebrations at four of the 28 sites this summer. Bring your young ones to join in the fun and practice their biking skills. See our Chain of Events on page 13 or learn more at sfsharedschoolyard.org.

Many commuters and people who bike took part in the 2016 Bike to Work Day festivities taking place May 12th.
Imagine this: A beautiful seven-mile bike ride, elevated over the San Francisco Bay with no stop signs or traffic lights.

For many, the transbay connection means a sweaty BART ride screeching underneath the Bay, infrequent ferries or buses, adding to the traffic and congestion on the Bay Bridge or worse: “I think I’ll stay in San Francisco tonight.”

Connecting the East Bay to San Francisco with a beautiful pathway no longer has to be a part of your imagination. Soon enough, you’ll be able to bike from Oakland to Treasure Island. But what about getting all the way to downtown San Francisco?

Every day there is a new record for San Francisco’s population. With tens of thousands moving into San Francisco over the past few years, people are feeling the squeeze on our streets. We feel it already in the bike lanes. In 2015 alone, there were 25 percent more people biking on Market Street than in the prior year.

BART cars rolling through Embarcadero Station during commute hours typically offer no room for your bike. Passengers bringing their bikes onto Caltrain commonly get “bumped” with insufficient bike spaces on board. And, to no one’s surprise, a recent report by the SF County Transportation Authority confirmed what we all expected: The Bay Bridge is already at capacity.

The path for people biking and walking the Bay Bridge’s West Span represents not only an architectural accomplishment to bridge two cities separated by a bay, but also one of practical need. With projections of 10,000 people biking on the Bay Bridge daily, the completion of the West Span pathway will uphold the Bay Area’s dedication to environmentally-friendly and sustainable living.

When it comes to a once-in-a-generation opportunity like building a bike path on the Bay Bridge, every step counts.

We’ve already taken the first step: a commitment by Steve Heminger, head of the Metropolitan Transportation Commission (MTC), the regional transportation agency for the nine Bay Area counties. At a Bike East Bay event in 2013, Heminger promised a path for people biking and walking that spans the entire Bay Bridge.

Heminger’s announcement came towards the end of multiple studies led by Caltrans, the state’s department of transportation. Nearly a thousand pages were published to determine the feasibility of a path for people biking and walking on the West Span, the first of which was published in 2002 along with a more detailed study completed in 2014.

To hone in on the design and every fine-grain detail, the MTC awarded Arup North America a $10 million contract in November, 2014 to translate the reports’ findings into a real and feasible design.
This hardworking team, led by Rafael Manzanarez and Rich Coffin, is eagerly turning a bikeable Bay Bridge into reality.

After a year of analysis, measuring everything from wind factors to cantilever physics and noise levels, Arup emerged in January, 2016 with stunning 3D images to share and gave the public the first real taste of what biking on the West Span could look like. From swirling ramps for ADA accessibility to glass elevators landing on the Embarcadero, the engineers and architects at Arup wowed the crowd, a packed, standing-room-only meeting earlier this year.

This project is complicated not only because of the immensity of a bridge structure but also because of the moving parts. Design has been broken into three distinct segments: the connection on Yerba Buena Island onto the West Span (pictured publicly for the first time on this Tube Times’ cover), the pathway on the span itself and the touchdown into downtown San Francisco. Several options have been developed for each segment, allowing for a menu of permutations to cook up the final three-course meal of the Bay Bridge West Span.

As this Tube Times went to print, the project managers at Arup confirmed that those designs pictured here are the preferred options based on feedback they received from the public. This special preview will be shared in full at an open house later this year before the final design options are brought to agency decisionmakers at the end of this planning process, which wraps up in early 2017.

After that, the next major step to turn three-dimensional computer-aided designs into real-life steel structures will be to identify the funding needed. Your SF Bicycle Coalition looks forward to working alongside project partners, our Bike East Bay allies and most importantly, our members to see this project through, currently projected for completion by 2026.

Completing the East Span

In Issue No. 100 of Tube Times, dated Oct.-Nov. 2004, the cover article was entitled “Biking to Oakland and Back.”

Back then, this was an otherworldly dream. The opening line read: “The grandest and potentially most popular multi-use pathways in the Bay Area exist only on paper.”

After two years of nearly-completed limbo, the East Span path for people biking and walking will finally touch down on Yerba Buena Island later this year to fully connect the East Bay to the edges of San Francisco. When complete, you’ll be able to ride from West Oakland and take the beautiful, 15-foot path named after long-time bicycle advocate and Bike East Bay founder, the late Alexander Zuckermann, all the way to Yerba Buena Island. There, you’ll land at a brand new vista point on U.S. Coast Guard territory where you can take in the sights.

As housing and commercial developments on Treasure Island are built out, so will the bike connections. This massive development project broke ground earlier this year and will transform both Treasure Island and Yerba Buena Island with new development and transportation networks, including bike-friendly and walkable streets, along with significantly improved access to and from the islands.

The grand visions your SF Bicycle Coalition dreamt up for the Tube Times 12 years ago are becoming a tangible, bikeable reality.

What’s Next?

We have only come this far because of San Francisco’s love affair with the Bay and the momentum of bike advocacy. For more than a decade now, members of the San Francisco Bicycle Coalition, as well as Bike East Bay members, have shared a common dream: to someday bike shore to shore across the Bay.

The fight continues to make that a reality in this generation, and you can make a difference. Come to the next open house. Ride with us when the East Span makes its way to Treasure Island. Tell everyone you know and ask them whether they want to be part of a truly awe-inspiring, historic opportunity...

After releasing four possibilities for the path’s landing in San Francisco and soliciting community feedback, engineers and architects are encouraging that only two move forward, in addition to an elevator, including this possible landing at Beale and Bryant Streets.

No Stopping Her (and Her Kids!) Now: Nori Tong

By Mara Mabugat

Some people might consider hauling two kids from the Castro to schools in the Haight and Outer Sunset daily a chore. Not so for Nori Yatsunami Tong.

“I feel less stressed — no finding parking. There’s freedom of movement. You’re not restricted,” Nori said. “There is more meeting other people.”

Nori Yatsunami Tong moved to San Francisco back in 2008 and has been riding a bike here since 2010. Born and raised in Tokyo, she brings that perspective to biking around SF.

“Biking is the norm there,” Nori said. “It’s how people get around. It’s what moms do.”

When Nori first started biking her children to school, however, there was a bit of an adjustment period.

“We often overtake neighbors and friends driving to school and wave at them,” Nori said. “Before, I had one child in a seat on the bike, but I could only ride with one child at a time. It was even getting harder with one kid.” Nori said of her experience biking with growing children with her old family biking gear.

“It all changed when I got a longtail family bike last year when my son was in kindergarten. I saw others at the school with the longtail bike with electric pedal-assist,” Nori said. “It’s a game changer.”

Now Nori’s family gets to experience the joys of biking in the city together.

“We often overtake neighbors and friends driving to school and wave at them,” Nori said. “It’s a game for us. They may catch up, then we get ahead again, then they pass.”

Especially as a parent, Nori understands the importance of having safer, stronger biking infrastructure. Well-versed in the City’s bike routes, Nori only rides with her family in the bike lanes and is hopeful about a future SF where bike lanes criss-cross the entire city.

“I see them improving every year,” said Nori.

Positive that others will enjoy it as much as she does, Nori encourages other families to try riding together.

“Try it and you’ll like it!,” she assured.

Nori and her family are a brilliant example that biking to school can be convenient and fun, and the bike lanes are a welcoming place for all ages and backgrounds.

Bikes & Parks :: Peas & Carrots
By Charles Deffarges

Life in San Francisco and enjoying parks go hand in hand. San Franciscans enjoy access to a whopping 230 parks making up approximately 3,500 acres of green space across the city. Golden Gate, Presidio, McLaren: these are but a few of the many park lands where people go to get a breath of fresh air.

With biking more popular than ever in San Francisco, it seems only natural that our parks be accessible to people riding their bikes. Biking is a healthy, fun and convenient way to get around and many residents are saddling up to get to their local parks. We are working hard to make sure that our parks are as bike-friendly as possible. Below are a few spots where biking is getting better and easier in San Francisco’s parks.

Major Improvements Coming to SF’s Second-Largest Park

McLaren Park is truly a local gem. Tucked away into the southeast corner of the city, the park features great views and an extensive trail system to escape the hustle and bustle of city life. But accessing this 317-acre open space isn’t the easiest, with hidden entrances and a four-lane Mansell Street bisecting the park.

New improvements to Mansell Street will transform the corridor and the park as a whole. With completion later this year, this high-speed street carving the park in half will have calmer traffic by reclaiming one side of the roadway for people. Vehicle traffic will remain on one side of the median while the other side will feature new, protected paths for people walking and biking fully separated from cars. These changes are huge news for people biking in the area and will provide much-needed access to McLaren Park, which will also receive other great new features in the coming years, including SF’s first bicycle skills park.

Views Reserved for People on Foot, Bike

Twin Peaks is familiar to most residents as the park with arguably the best views in San Francisco. Where else is it possible to get a full panorama of the east and west sides of the City? For years, however, this popular recreational ride was only for those ready to bike with fast-moving traffic. Worse for pedestrians, visitors on foot had no space and simply walked precariously at the road’s edge, making it particularly unwelcoming to families, seniors and people with disabilities.

Thanks to yet another reclamation of park space for people, the Twin Peaks project was approved earlier this year to open up one side of Twin Peaks exclusively to people biking and walking. The other half will be converted into two-way traffic to maintain vehicle access. This project finally gives space for people to take in the gorgeous views where previously there was no dedicated space for biking and walking. What better way to celebrate this new open space than with a visit of your own?
Whether you’re training for a big ride or just learning how to bike, Golden Gate Park celebrates all types of riders. From open street festivities every Sunday or the protected bike lanes on JFK Drive, you can easily bike to and from all the wonders of Golden Gate Park. Looking to ride fast? Take a spin around the Polo Field in Golden Gate Park, where you can circle the one-mile loop with no obstacles.

The pathway that circles the Polo Field started out as a cycling track in 1906, but after over a century of existence, the track needed improvements. Thanks to Friends of the Polo Field’s advocacy and volunteerism, rough patches were restored with new striping and signage to improve conditions. Take a look next time you are in Golden Gate Park and go for a lap (or 10).

Riding across the Golden Gate Bridge is always an incredible experience. Ocean air and fantastic views make the Bridge a very popular biking destination for locals and tourists alike. Up until recently, riders coming from the Presidio Coastal Trail would have a tricky time getting onto the western, bike-only span of the Bridge. Accessing the Bridge’s bike path required navigating the often-crowded Bridge Plaza. Now, a new addition to the Presidio Coastal Trail makes riding onto the Bridge a breeze.

The new stretch of the Presidio Coastal Trail connects Lincoln Boulevard to the Bridge’s western span, allowing people walking and biking to access the Bridge seamlessly. For people biking from the Bridge, the path provides a connection to Lincoln Boulevard as well as the rest of the Presidio. The mixed-use trail is ADA-accessible, offers great views of the Pacific and features a bridge across two existing bunkers in the Presidio. If you ever needed an excuse to explore the Golden Gate Bridge by bike, this new trail is as good as it gets.
What makes the San Francisco Bicycle Coalition one of the strongest and most effective advocacy organizations in the city? Over 10,000 passionate members committed to promoting the bicycle for everyday transportation is a big reason, along with diverse community partnerships and a hard-working staff.

There’s another critical, though less prominent, element to the San Francisco Bicycle Coalition’s success: our all-volunteer Board of Directors.

Are you an engaged member interested in serving on the board? Here’s a quick overview of key questions:

WHAT ARE THE BOARD’S RESPONSIBILITIES?

The top responsibilities of this 15-member team include fiduciary oversight, governance duties, strategic direction and fundraising -- all with the goal of advancing the SF Bicycle Coalition’s mission and supporting our organizational health.

Board members also participate in regular meetings and public events, such as member gatherings and fundraising events. The board plays an important role in representing the organization on group rides and at events like Bike to Work Day.

HOW MUCH TIME DOES BOARD SERVICE TAKE?

Most Board members typically average two-to-three hours weekly, including evenings and weekends, with some seasons busier than others.

HOW DOES ONE BECOME A BOARD MEMBER?

Each year, half of the 15 board seats are up for election for two-year terms. Any current SF Bicycle Coalition member is eligible to run. All members may vote. We are preparing now for the 2016 board elections, with voting later this year.

If you’re considering board service, here are a few recommended steps to take:

- Read more about board roles and responsibilities, as well as the top needs, skills and qualities that have been identified as board priorities this year.
- Come to a board meeting (listed on page 13.)
- Contact a current board member to ask questions or learn more about their experiences. Learn about the process -- including the deadline to declare as a candidate for this year’s board election (planned for later this summer, date to be shared online in July.)

Get additional information on these and other board-related topics at sfbike.org/board_election.

GET TO KNOW YOUR BOARD

Lisa Fisher
Urban Planner

“I was on maternity leave, flipping through a Tube Times during one of many many feedings, and saw the call for Board of Director candidates. I wanted to keep biking with my little son, was deeply grateful to the work of the Bicycle Coalition and felt it would be an honor to serve.”

Mary Kay Chin
Community Organizer

“While this position does require a lot of volunteer time and work, the payout is priceless. Our ability to help govern, shape and lead by example a nationally-recognized bicycle advocacy organization is deeply meaningful. I can ride my bike confidently, knowing that our work will shape the future of our streets and our city.”

Zack Stender
Owner of Huckleberry Bicycles

“I’d say run if you want to help make San Francisco a more bikeable city. Run if you want to play a bigger part in making this city’s public spaces better places to be. Be prepared to do your part. This is a very active board.”

Championing a Strong SF Bicycle Coalition: Calling for Interested Board Candidates

By the SF Bicycle Coalition Board of Directors

Mary Fisher
Urban Planner

“While I’ve been on maternity leave, flipping through a Tube Times during one of many feedings, and saw the call for Board of Director candidates. I wanted to keep biking with my little son, was deeply grateful to the work of the Bicycle Coalition and felt it would be an honor to serve.”
“I learned to ride out of necessity,” SF Bicycle Coalition member Wei-min Wang said. “I had signed my six-year-old up for bike camp in the summer, and I figured I would be no match for him if I had to chase him around on foot.”

Before 2015, Wei-min’s only experience biking was as a child, riding around his basement on a bike with training wheels that he never removed.

“Honestly, it felt like quite an accomplishment and long overdue,” Wei-min told your SF Bicycle Coalition staff. “It seems like everyone knows how to ride a bike, but it took me more than 40 years to get around to it. I grew up in San Francisco and neither of my parents knew how to ride, so I didn’t have any teachers.”

Until last year, that is, when Wei-min took learning to bike into his own hands.

“I searched online for a class and was pleased to learn about the SF Bicycle Coalition’s free Adult Learn to Ride classes,” Wei-min said. “Then, in addition to the Learn to Ride class, I also took the Intro to Urban Bicycling workshop.”

Now, Wei-min is more than just someone who knows how to bike. He supports our advocacy and education efforts as an SF Bicycle Coalition member and he bikes regularly. Wei-min told us that he logged over 2,000 miles in the saddle in the past year.

“I ride three-to-four times a week on average. It’s mostly for fitness and mental health, but I’ve biked to work a few times, used my bike to run errands and even taken my four-year-old to school once by bike,” Wei-min said. “She’s been bugging me to do that again.”

Embarking biking has changed how Wei-min thinks about navigating his hometown.

“I’d say the best parts are the freedom of movement and the fresh air,” Wei-min said. “You can get places fast, but you can also take your time and enjoy how beautiful the city is without the stress of traffic jams or being cooped up behind the wheel.”

Thinking back on his experience in the Adult Learn to Ride Class, Wei-min recalls how his instructors quickly put the class at ease.

“I was pleasantly surprised by the wide age range of the students and felt right at home,” Wei-min said. “The instructors knew their stuff and made it easy to learn. They were confident that we’d all be riding within two-to-three hours and they were right.”

Now Wei-min is an evangelist for biking, encouraging others who—like him—never learned to ride in childhood:

“Go for it. It’s fun, it’s good for your health and great for the environment. The network of bike routes around town is extensive and getting better each year. So getting around is easy.

“Yes, there are hills,” Wei-min acknowledged, “but those, too, get easier with practice.”

Wei-min is an inspiring example of how it’s never too late to learn to bike. If there’s someone in your life who could use a little support and encouragement to get rolling, please let them know that we are here to help. Details about our free bicycle education classes are available at sfbike.org/edu.

TRAFFIC SKILLS 101: CLASSROOM WORKSHOP
Ongoing

Looking to get comfortable riding in San Francisco? Join us for a presentation covering all you need to know for biking around SF and the Bay Area. This is the perfect class for those already riding to hone their skills, or for people interested in riding but intimidated by urban traffic. No bicycle is necessary for this class. For class dates and times, see sfbike.org/education.

TRAFFIC SKILLS 101: ON-ROAD WORKSHOP
Ongoing

Practice what you learned in the Traffic Skills 101: Classroom. This one-bicycle class follows a comfortable progression onto city streets, beginning with a short review of the lessons from the classroom course. After a basic bike maintenance session, the class will practice bike maneuvering skills in a car-free practice area before riding on the streets in small, intimate groups led by instructors. You will gain experience riding alongside moving traffic in different traffic conditions, applying the safe riding techniques practiced in the car-free space. For class dates and times, see sfbike.org/education.

ADULT LEARN TO RIDE
Ongoing

You’re never too old to learn how to ride a bicycle. Instructors will work one-on-one to teach the basics of balancing, starting, stopping and steering a bike, as well as proper helmet fit and adjustment. Most people learn to ride their bike while taking the class, but even if they don’t, they will leave with tips to continue teaching themselves to ride. For class dates and times, see sfbike.org/education.
